

CITY OF HAYWARD

AGENDA REPORT

AGENDA DATE 07/24/01

AGENDA ITEM _____

WORK SESSION ITEM WS 3

TO: Mayor, City Council and Planning Commission

FROM: Director of Community and Economic Development

SUBJECT: Housing Element Update

RECOMMENDATION:

It is recommended that the City Council and Planning Commission review and comment on this report.

BACKGROUND:

The purpose of this joint work session is to formulate the preliminary policies and strategies to be included in the draft Housing Element. Potential policy directions and strategies have emerged from the public meetings identifying housing issues and needs. Staff has reviewed existing policies and strategies in adopted city plans, particularly the 1990 Housing Element and its 1992 and 1995 Amendments, to determine their continuing relevance, implementation status, and relationship to identified issues and needs. Staff has also reviewed the policies and strategies contained in the neighborhood plans to ensure that any recommendations with potential city-wide impacts have been included as part of this process and that any recommendations that may conflict with the policies and strategies proposed in the draft Housing Element will be addressed.

At this time, staff is seeking comments on the appropriateness of proposed policies and strategies, any perceived conflicts in the preliminary policies and strategies, and suggestions for additions needed to adequately address identified issues. During the summer, staff will develop programs to implement the preliminary draft policies and strategies for further review by the City Council and Planning Commission at work sessions in September. It is anticipated that the draft Housing Element can be completed by the end of September and sent to the State of California Department of Housing and Community Development for review.

DISCUSSION:

Much has changed in Hayward since the last full Housing Element update in 1990. Hayward has grown by approximately 30,000 people in the past ten years. Accommodating this and future growth, without a negative impact on existing neighborhoods, and improving the quality of life for all Hayward residents are critical issues in this Housing Element update cycle.

The State of California requires that localities prepare a land inventory for the Housing Element that identifies vacant and underutilized parcels suitable for housing to ensure that there are sufficient sites for residential development to meet the allocation of units to meet the State's projected housing needs. In this context, vacant parcels are defined as unimproved land designated for residential development. In communities with limited vacant land, the inventory should identify and analyze underutilized land available for use as sites for housing. To obtain the number of acres available, underutilized land was defined as parcels on which the Assessor's land value is higher than the value of the building(s), since potentially, these parcels are zoned or could be zoned for more intensive residential use.

In 1990, there were 1,660 acres of vacant and underutilized land in the City available for housing. This total has decreased substantially as new subdivisions have been built. Today, only 838 acres remain. Of that, 327 acres are vacant residentially zoned land divided into 448 parcels -- 35% of which is located in the unincorporated Mt. Eden area. Only thirty-four of the vacant parcels are larger than two acres. Approximately 535 acres in 605 parcels are underutilized land zoned for residential use on which more intensive development is possible. Approximately, two-thirds of these parcels are less than an acre in size and most are not contiguous. Out of 605 parcels, there are 231 which are more than two acres in size and only half of those are larger than three acres. This data shows that much of Hayward's future housing potential will be on lots within or near existing neighborhoods.

In addition to the parcels described above, there are approximately 85 acres of recyclable land that are proposed to be rezoned from industrial to a mix of residential, commercial and open space in Areas 2 and 3 depicted in the Cannery Area Design Plan. This plan, which envisions between 786 and 962 units of housing, demonstrates how good design can sensitively integrate new housing and amenities with the adjacent neighborhood to improve the quality of life for all. Approximately 71 acres in Area 2 will be included in the request for development proposals to be issued by the Redevelopment Agency.

In 1990, rising real estate prices were considered a barrier to home ownership. In 2001, sales prices for standard homes have increased far beyond the reach of moderate/middle income households. The average price of a existing three bedroom, two bath home in Hayward is $325,000 (excluding homes in the Hayward hills). A household of three with an income of $77,300 (120% of median income) can afford a maximum mortgage of $232,511; likewise a household of four with an income of $85,900 (120% of median income) can afford a maximum mortgage of $253,794. (To determine the amount of the monthly mortgage payment a homebuyer can afford, staff used the standard lending ratio of 33% of total monthly income for housing costs, including principal, interest, taxes and insurance.) Only with a very large downpayment or a $50,000 deferred second mortgage or an expanded housing costs ratio of 40% of monthly income, can households of three and four afford to purchase the median home in Hayward. An inclusionary zoning ordinance, that establishes a set percentage of new housing units that must be sold at an affordable price to first time homebuyers, may be one way to ensure that people who live and work in Hayward can afford to purchase a home here.

Rents and security deposits have increased as well, far faster than the increase in household incomes, creating a hardship for low and/or fixed income tenants. An unanticipated side effect of higher rents throughout Hayward is that many low income tenants can no longer qualify to rent a market rate apartment. Current tenant screening criteria, used by apartment managers in Alameda County, requires that the prospective tenants' monthly income be at least 2.5 times the monthly rent. With rents between $1,000 and $1,500 per month, households who rent must earn at least $30,000 to $45,000 per year to qualify. Many tenant households qualified and leased their apartments when rents were substantially lower. As rents have increased, the percentage of household income spent on rent has risen substantially. If they needed to find a new unit, many tenants would not be able to qualify to rent an apartment at the rents they are currently paying. Encouraging the acquisition and rehabilitation of existing apartment buildings using the City's multifamily mortgage bond program is one way to guarantee that at least 20% of those units will be available to low income and fixed income Hayward residents.

1995 Homeownership Amendment

During consideration of the General Plan Annual Review in 1994, City Council expressed the desire to increase the percentage of Hayward residents who are homeowners. On October 17, 1995, the City Council approved an amendment to the Housing Element of the General Plan to establish a goal of 70% owner-occupied housing in the City of Hayward.

This policy direction met a two-fold purpose. First, it promoted the development of homeownership programs to meet the needs of people both living and working in Hayward. The City's current Growth Management Element articulates the following general development principle: "Promote housing that supports the economic base and matches the supply of existing jobs. Ensure a choice of housing opportunities (e.g., location, size, type and income level) throughout the City that meets the needs of residents, students and workers." Second, it fostered homeownership opportunities to enhance neighborhood stability, encourage the maintenance and upkeep of the housing stock as well as help to preserve the character of existing single-family neighborhoods.

From 1980 to 1990, the percentage of owner-occupied housing in Hayward fell from 55% to 51% as the price of ownership housing increased in California. The proportion of ownership housing declined, despite the fact that ownership-type units (e.g., single-family detached homes, condominiums, mobilehomes, etc.) constitute approximately 64% of Hayward's current housing stock. As a result of housing programs included in this Amendment, more than 150 households were able to become homeowners in Hayward due to the City's downpayment and closing cost loan program for first time homebuyers. That program and new residential development have increased the City's owner-occupancy rate to 53.2%, creating 934 more owner-occupants than would have been the case had the owner-occupancy rate remained the same as in 1990.

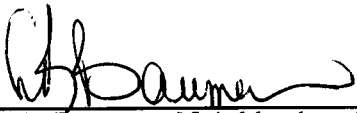

Public Input

Staff participated in four public meetings to obtain public input regarding housing issues of concern to the community. Total attendance at these meetings was approximately 200 to 250 people. Participants focused on quality of life issues, housing affordability, and how to expand the supply of housing without creating a negative impact on existing neighborhoods. Participants concurred regarding the following:

- ◆ the City should create policies in the Housing Element that take into account how housing and the other elements of a neighborhood are interrelated;
- ◆ development should add to quality of neighborhood life, not diminish it;
- ◆ the City should focus on creating livable neighborhoods, not just housing;
- ◆ the City should encourage a wide variety of housing stock for our diverse community; and
- ◆ Hayward needs more housing units at rents that are reasonable for people who are living/working here.

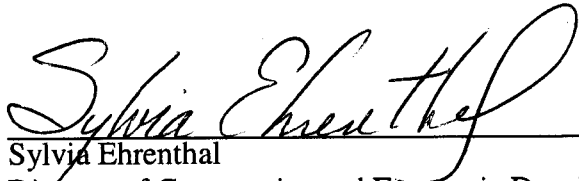

Exhibit A are the draft policies and strategies concerning housing that were proposed for the Land Use Element as presented in the agenda report of June 26, 2001. These are included here to create a context for the Housing Element, to collect all of the policies and strategies concerning housing in a single agenda report, and here to ensure compatibility between the two Elements. Exhibit B, Draft Policies and Strategies for the Housing Element, was developed to respond to the concerns described in this report. Exhibit C contains the Policies and Strategies from the 1990 Housing Element and its Amendments.
